PRONUNCIATION OF FOREIGN WORDS

GENERAL OUTLINE OF PHONETIC THEORY

In order to pronounce words belonging to a foreign language in a way that shall be intelligible to native speakers of that language, we require to know :—

(1) the sounds used by native speakers ;
(2) the relative length of these sounds ;
(3) the nature and position of the stress or accent ;
(4) the conventional method of representing these sounds, and their attributes of length and stress, in the written language.

Sounds.

All speech sounds may be divided into two classes, viz. :—

(a) those in which the vocal cords vibrate, to form voice ;
(b) those in which the cords are silent.

Sounds of the first class are called voiced sounds, while those of the second class are called voiceless. A ready way of distinguishing the two classes of sounds is to try the effect of singing them ; we can sing a tune on the sound of m, which is voiced, but not on the sound s, which is voiceless. Every voiced sound has its voiceless counterpart, thus z (the buzzing sound) and s (the hissing sound) form a pair, as do b and p, d and t, g (as in go) and k, or c, as in car.

With regard to voiced sounds, it is necessary to observe that the vibration of the vocal cords may (i) persist throughout the period of articulation of the sound ; (ii) persist throughout a part of the period of articulation ; (iii) be entirely absent throughout the period of articulation. Sounds of the first order are called fully voiced, of the second order partially voiced, and of the third order devoiced. A devoiced sound is not necessarily the same as a voiceless sound, as can be easily demonstrated by saying a word like bat with a devoiced b. The result is not pat.

All vowel sounds are voiced sounds ; consonants may be voiced or voiceless. Languages vary among themselves as to the degree of vocal vibration they use in the articulation of their voiced sounds. As a general rule it may be observed that Romance languages use a greater amount of vocal vibration than Teutonic languages, the former making use of fully voiced consonants, the latter of partially voiced and devoiced consonants. English seems to show a preference for the partially voiced variety.

In the alphabet of the International Phonetic Association the sign ̥ placed beneath a letter indicates that the sound is devoiced.

Vowel Sounds.—If a stream of air, that has been charged with vibrations by the action of the vocal cords, passes through the mouth without encountering either complete obstruction or any narrowing sufficient to cause audible friction, it will emerge as a vowel sound. The number of vowel sounds to be found in all the languages of the world is very considerable, and the problem of classifying them is not simple. Many attempts have been made to solve it, the most recent being that made at University College, London, by Professor Daniel Jones. Certain sounds are chosen as Standard or Cardinal Vowels ; they are recorded on a gramophone record, and X-ray photographs are taken of the position of the articulating organs in each case. A diagrammatic chart of the vowel sounds of any language, as they stand in reference to the Cardinal Vowels, can then be made. In this way we are able to describe the vowels of one language without having continually to refer them to those of another language.

The eight Cardinal Vowel Sounds, and the symbols used in the International Phonetic Alphabet to represent them, are : –

1.—i as in French si.
2.—e „ „ „ été.
3.—ɛ „ „ „ père.
4.—a „ „ „ la, or Northern English man.
5.—ɑ as in French pâte.
6.—ɔ „ „ English caught.
7.—o „ „ French gros
8.—u „ „ Italian tu.

The equivalents given are only approximate ; the actual sounds can be heard on the gramophone record.*

If we combine the tongue position of No. 1 with the lip position of No. 8, we have the sound y as in French plus, German für.

A similar combination of Cardinal Vowels No. 2 and No. 7 gives the sound ø, as in French peu, German schön, while from a combination of Nos. 3 and 6 we derive the sound œ, as in French peur, German Böcke.

The eight Cardinal Vowels, with the three additional "front rounded" sounds, form a useful series of standard sounds, with which we may compare the vowel sounds of many languages.

To these must be added a vowel sound that appears frequently in unstressed syllables, and to which is given the name of "neutral" vowel. There is a neutral vowel in English, in the last syllable of such words as actor, singer, idea, etc. ; there is a neutral vowel in the first syllable of French cheval, and another in the final syllable of German habe. The International Phonetic Alphabet represents this sound by the symbol ə.

Vowel sounds made when the soft palate is lowered, so that sound passes through both mouth and nose, are known as nasalised vowels. Nasalisation is expressed by the sign ˜ placed over the vowel symbol. Thus French bon contains the vowel ɔ̃, banc has ɑ̃, pain has ɛ̃, and brun has œ̃.

Semi-Vowels.—A short vowel sound used before another vowel sound is known as a semi-vowel. The three most common semi-vowels are those corresponding to the sounds i, u, and y.

The semi-vowel corresponding to i is represented by j. English yes (jes), German ja (ja), French hier (jɛːr).

The semi-vowel corresponding to u is represented by w, e.g. English we (wiː), French oui (wi).

The semi-vowel corresponding to y is represented by ɥ, e.g., French lui (lɥi).

Diphthongs.—A succession of two vowel sounds that belong to one and the same syllable is known as a diphthong, e.g., the English words my, no (as pronounced in Southern English), day, now, boy, contain diphthongs.

When the Cardinal Vowel symbols are not sufficient to represent the vowel sounds of a language, the International Phonetic Alphabet uses others, e.g., ɪ for the short vowel in English bit, German bitte ; æ for the vowel in Southern English man ; ʊ for the short vowel in English cook, German Luft.

Consonants.—Sounds, whether voiced or voiceless, that arise from partial or complete obstruction in the mouth are known as consonant sounds. These can be best classified according to :—

(1) the nature of the obstruction, or articulation ;
(2) the place of the obstruction or articulation.

On the first basis, consonant sounds are divided into :—

(a) Plosive Consonants, when the obstruction is complete and the release sudden. When the ensuing vowel follows instantaneously, the sound is unaspirated, when an audible puff of breath follows the explosion, the sound is aspirated ; b, d, g, p, t, k are plosive sounds.

*Record No. B804, Gramophone Co., Hayes, Middlesex.

(b) Affricate Consonants when the explosion is followed by a slow audible release, like ch in English church, or j and dge in judge. These two sounds are represented by ʧ and ʤ.

(c) Nasal Consonants, when the mouth is completely obstructed, and the nose passage is open.

m and n are nasal consonants, as in ng in sing, represented by the symbol ŋ, and gn in French agneau, represented by ɲ.

(d) Lateral Consonants, when the obstruction is along the middle of the mouth, one or both sides being free. l is a lateral consonant, as also is Spanish ll and Italian gl, represented by ʎ.

(e) Rolled Consonants, when there is rapid intermittent contact, as in Northern English r, Spanish rr, French r.

(f) Fricative Consonants, when there is no complete obstruction, but only a constriction that gives rise to audible friction.

English s, f, v, z, h, th (θ in thick, and ð in then) usually stand for fricative consonants; b, d, g stand for fricative consonants in certain positions in Spanish, when their sounds are represented respectively by the symbols β, ð, ɣ.

German ch stands for the two fricative consonant sounds ç and x.

According to the place of the obstruction or, as it is sometimes called, the point of articulation, Consonant Sounds are divided into :—

(1) Bilabial Consonants, articulated between the two lips, e.g., English, French b, p stand for bilabial plosives; Spanish b and German w sometimes stand for the bilabial fricative β.

(2) Labio Dental Consonants, articulated between the upper lip and the lower front teeth, e.g., English, Spanish, French f, v. In Italian m and n before f and v usually stand for a Labio Dental sound ɱ,

(3) Dental Consonants, articulated between the tongue tip and the upper front teeth, e.g., French, Spanish t, d; English th, as in thin, then.

(4) Alveolar Consonants, articulated between the tongue tip and the upper teeth ridge, or gums, e.g., English t, d, n, l.

(5) Palatal Consonants, articulated between the upper front surface of the tongue and the hard palate, e.g., German j; French and Italian gn, as in agneau, ogni; German ch, after i, e, l, r. Italian gl and Spanish ll stand for the Palatal Consonant ʎ.

(6) Velar Consonants, articulated between back of tongue and soft palate, e.g., English and German k, g. German ch after a, o, u, and Spanish j, stand for the Velar sound x.

(7) Uvular Consonants, articulated between back of tongue and uvula. The so-called French "r grasseyé" is made in this way. Its symbol is R.

(8) Glottal Consonants, articulated between the vocal cords. Of these the most important in European languages is the "glottal stop," a plosive consonant made by the vocal cords, giving the impression of a momentary cessation of sound. It is commonly substituted for p and t in certain dialects (Northern and Cockney) in certain positions, e.g., bo'le and wa'er for bottle and water. The symbol for this sound is ʔ.

Length of Sounds.—Vowel and consonant sounds may be of varying degrees of length, that is to say, they may persist for varying intervals of time. Languages make use of this variation in length in different ways.

Some languages have long vowels and short vowels, e.g., the vowel in English bead is longer than that in bid. In some languages length depends upon the nature of following consonants. Thus in English, bead is longer than beat, and in French part is longer than patte. This variation in length may apply also to consonants : in Italian the rr of carro is longer than the r of caro.

A long vowel sound is indicated in the International Phonetic Alphabet by the symbol ː ; a long consonant sound is indicated by doubling the letter.

Representation of Sounds by means of Letters.—It must be borne in mind that Language, as modern civilized communities know it, consists of two widely different things, viz. :—

(a) Speech, which is made up of sounds : these are made by the Mouth and apprehended by the Ear.

(b) Printed or Written Language, which is made up of letters. These are made by the Hand and apprehended by the Eye.

The first belongs to the realm of Sound ; the second to the realm of Sight. Since Sight and Sound are in themselves irreconcilable in nature, it follows that any attempt to represent sounds by visual signs or letters must rest upon numerous conventions. The Languages of the world have each its own sounds, differing greatly from one another in variety, in number, and in distribution. The Languages with which we are concerned in this article use the same system of Letters, namely, the Roman Alphabet, with additions and modifications that vary from language to language. In order to translate a visual language into sounds, that is to say, in order to pronounce a language when we see it, we need to know the conventional relationships that exist in that language between sound and letter. The more uniform these conventions are, the more " phonetic " is the spelling.

It is evident that since one system of letters is used for so many varying systems of sounds, letters will have different sounds in different languages ; and since there are, in any one language, usually more sounds than letters, a letter may have more than one value in that language. Thus the letter b, in French, usually stands for a fully voiced bilabial plosive sound (b) ; in English it very often stands for a partially voiced bilabial plosive sound (b̥) ; in Dutch and German it often stands for the devoiced sound (b̥) or for the voiceless sound (p) ; while in Spanish it often stands for the bilabial fricative sound (β).

The same letter or letters may have to do duty in any one language for more than one sound ; e.g., in English s stands for s in picks, for z in figs, for ʃ in sure, and for ʒ in measure. Again, the same sound may be represented in a language by different letters ; e.g., in English the vowel sound i is represented differently in be, see, sea, receive, believe, key, quay, Beauchamp, people.

In order to obviate discrepancies of this kind, which are indeed inevitable, many " phonetic " alphabets have been invented, their purpose being to have one symbol per sound. But even this aim, admirable as it appears, is impossible of achievement, owing to the variety of modifications that sounds undergo in the rough-and-tumble of language life. Sounds that at first appear to be identical are found on examination to be different. The k sound we use in key is not the same as the one we use in car ; the k we use in cool is not the same as many of us use in school. It is now recognised that no phonetic alphabet can accurately represent all the minute variations of sound that are met with in any language. The International Phonetic Alphabet recognises this, and its fundamental principle is that a symbol shall stand for all or any of the varieties of a given sound that are found in any one language. Further, it must be remembered that no alphabet can represent all the varieties of sound used in all the languages of the world. It is not to be assumed, because the International Phonetic Alphabet uses the symbol i in English, French and German words, that the vowel sound in each language is the same. The value of a symbol may vary from language to language. The values that the symbols have in the different languages must be defined by the phonetician and known by the student.

Stress or Accent.—Most European languages have a system of Stress. Certain syllables in the word, and certain words in the sentence, are given greater prominence than the others. The degree of regularity in the sequence of these prominent syllables constitutes the rhythmic structure of the language. Concerning the nature of the stress little is known. It appears to consist of :—

(a) additional length ; (b) peculiarity of tone ;
(c) peculiarity of vowel quality ; (d) additional loudness.

Any or all of these items may constitute the stress of a language.

With regard to the distribution of the stress, three main principles prevail :—

(a) The stress is generally found in a certain position, e.g., the final syllable in French, the penultimate in Welsh.
(b) The stress falls on the main root, as usually in German.
(c) The stress may fall on any syllable, as in English.

The sign ˈ placed before a syllable indicates that the stress falls on that syllable.

The letter h is never pronounced except possibly in interjections aha ! he ! Some words that begin with this letter allow of elision, e.g. l'homme (l'ɔm). Others do not allow of elision, le hibou (lə ibu). This is the only difference between the "h mute" and the "h aspirate."

Length of Vowel Sounds.—Vowel sounds are longer before the sounds v, z, ʒ, r, than before other sounds. The nasalized vowels and the vowels ɑ and o are longer than the other vowels in closed syllables. All final vowels are usually short.

Stress.—This falls normally on the final pronounced syllable. If the stress is emphatic it may fall on another syllable.

absolument is apsɔly'mɑ̃ normally, but ap'sɔlymɑ̃ emphatically.

Length of Vowel Sounds.—The accented vowel is long in open syllables, and short in closed syllables, e.g., caro is kaːro; carro is karro.

Position of Stress.—Usually on the last syllable but one. An accent over the last vowel shows that the stress is on that vowel, e.g., sarò. Sometimes the accent may be on the antepenultimate syllable, or even before that.

Stress.—This may fall on the last syllable, e.g., razón; on the penultimate syllable, e.g., castillo; or on the ante-penultimate syllable, rápido.

PRONUNCIATION

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES

How Latin was pronounced by the Romans can never be known, for we have no gramophone records to help us, though it would seem reasonable to suppose that Italian would afford us a clue. But at the revival of learning when Latin was introduced into our Grammar Schools, which were founded or re-established as Latin Grammar Schools, it was treated as a dead language to be pronounced as if the words were in the native language of the learners. This method, the local style as it is called, is still prevalent and is likely to continue, particularly for systematic names in natural science and proper names in general, as in the accompanying list.

It has the great advantage of leaving no doubt as to the quantities, for it is impossible to slur them, and it also keeps the syllables clear. This local style, however, which gives us one pronunciation in England and another in Scotland, does not satisfy those who study Latin as literature. During the last fifty years many and varied have been the efforts to abandon it, and the pronunciation recommended by the Classical Association has been adopted in many schools and colleges.

In this there is a long and short for each vowel, a long being sounded as in father, a short as in hat; e long as in prey, e short as in fret; i long as in deed, i short as in fit; o long as in home, o short as in not; u long as in boot, u short as in pull; the diphthongs having the sounds of both letters together, ae as ai in Isaiah, au as ou in hour, and oe as oi in boil. Among the consonants c and g are always hard as in cat and go, gu is as gw, j is as y, qu as in queen, s as in gas, t is always hard, even before i, and x is always as ks and not as kz. Double consonants are sounded separately, the second of the pair beginning the next syllable. In words of two syllables the stress is always on the first; in other words it is generally on the last but one. The pronunciation of Greek words is much on the same system, but ch is sounded as in loch, and not as in the English rendering of chorus.

THE VOWELS.

Every accented syllable not ending in a consonant is pronounced as in English, with its first, long, open sound: thus, Ca'to, Philome'la, Ori'on, Pho'cion, Lu'cifer, &c., have the accented vowels sounded exactly as in the English words pa'per, me'ter, spi'der, no'ble, tu'tor, &c., respectively.

Every accented vowel, followed by a consonant, has the short sound, as in English: thus, Man'lius, Pen'theus, Pin'darus, Col'chis, Cur'tius, &c., have the short sound of the accented vowels, as in man'ner, plen'ty, prin'ter, col'lar, cur'few, &c., respectively.

Every final i, though unaccented, has the long, open sound: thus, the final i forming the genitive case, as in Magis'tri, or the plural number, as in De'cii, has the long, open sound, as in vi'al; and this because the Latin i final in such cases is always long. Consequently, where the accented i is followed by i final, both are pronounced with the long diphthongal i, like the noun eye, as Achi'vi.

Every unaccented i ending a syllable not final, as that in the second syllable of Alcibiades, the Hernici, &c., is pronounced like e, as if written Alcebiades, the Herneci, &c. So also the last syllable but one of the Fabii, the Horatii, the Curiatii, &c., is pronounced as if written Fa-be-i, Ho-ra-she-i, Cu-re-a-she-i; and therefore, if the unaccented i and the diphthong æ conclude a word, they are both pronounced like e, as Harpyiæ, Har-py'e-e.

The diphthongs æ and œ, ending a syllable with the accent on it, are pronounced exactly like the long English e, as Cæsar, Œta, &c., as if written Cee'sar, Ee'ta, &c.; and like the short e, when followed by a consonant in the same syllable, as Dædalus, Œdipus, &c., pronounced as if written Deddalus, Eddipus, &c. The vowels ei are generally pronounced like long i. For the vowels eu in final syllables, see the word Idomeneus; and for the ou in the same syllables, see the word Antinous, and similar words in the list.

Y has exactly the same treatment as i. It is long when ending an accented syllable, as Cy'rus; or when ending an unaccented syllable, if final, as Æ'gy, Æ'py, &c.; short when joined to a consonant in the same syllable, as Lyc'idas; and sometimes long and sometimes short, when ending an initial syllable not under the accent, as Lycur'gus, pronounced with the first syllable like lie, a falsehood; and Lysim'achus with the first syllable like the first of legion, or nearly as if divided into Lys-im'-a-chus, &c.

A, ending an unaccented syllable, has the obscure sound which it has in the same situation in English words; but it has a sound bordering on the Italian a, or the a in father, as Dia'na, where the difference between the accented and unaccented a is palpable.

E final, both with and without the preceding consonant, always forms a distinct syllable, as Penelope, Hippocrene, Evoe, Amphitrite, &c. When any Greek or Latin word is Anglicized into this termination, by cutting off a syllable of the original, it then becomes an English word, and is pronounced according to our own analogy: thus, Acidalius, altered to Acidale, has the final e sunk, and is a word of three syllables only. Proserpine, from Proserpina, undergoes the same alteration. Thebes and Athens, derived from the Greek Θῆβη and Ἀθῆνη, and the Latin Thebæ and Athenæ, are perfectly Anglicized; the former into a monosyllable, and the latter into a dissyllable: and the Greek Κρήτη and the Latin Creta have both sunk into the English monosyllable Crete; Hecate likewise, pronounced in three syllables when Latin, and in the same number when in the Greek word Ἑκάτη, is in English usually contracted into two, by sinking the final e.

The Roman magistrate, named Ædilis, is Anglicized by pronouncing it in two syllables, Æ'dile. The capital of Sicily, Syracusæ of four syllables, is made three in the English, Syr'acuse: and the city of Tyrus, of two syllables, is reduced to a monosyllable in the English Tyre. Sometimes the accent is shifted, as in Shakespeare's "Titus Andronicus," pronounced An-dron'-e-cus, though in Latin it is An-dro-ni'-cus.

THE CONSONANTS.

C and G are hard before a, o, and u, as Cato, Comus, Cures, Galba, Gorgon, &c.; and soft before e, i, and y, as Cebes, Cinna, Cycnus, Geryon, Geta, Gillus, Gyges, Gymnosophistæ, &c.

C, S, and T, before ia, ie, ii, io, iu, and eu, when preceded by the accent in Latin words, as in English, change into sh and z, as Accius, Caduceus, Helvetii, Hesiod, Mæsia, Portia, Portius, Socias, Statius, Tatian, pronounced Aksheus, Cadusheus, Helveshei, Hezeod, Mezea, Porshea, Porsheus, Sosheas, Stasheus, Tashean, &c. But when the accent is on the first of the diphthongal vowels, the preceding consonant does not change into sh, but preserves its sound pure, as Miltiades, Antiates, &c.

Proper names ending in tia, sia, and sion, when preceded by the accent, change the t, s, &c., into sh and zh. Thus we have Artemisia and Aspasia sounding as if written Artemisjea and Aspasjea; Galatia, Aratia, Alotia, and Batia, as if written Galashea, Arashea, Aloshea, and Bashea; and if Atia, the town in Campania, is not so pronounced, it is to distinguish it from Asia, the eastern region of the world. But the termination tion (of which there are not so many as twenty examples in proper names throughout the whole Greek and Latin languages) seems to preserve the t from going into sh, as the last remnant of a learned pronunciation, as if to avoid, as much as possible, assimilating with so vulgar an English termination: thus, though Æsion, Iasion, Dionysion, change the s into z, as if written Æzion, Iazion, Dionyzion, the z does not become zh; but Philistion, Gration, Eurytion, Dotion, Androtion, Hippotion, Iphition, Ornytion, Metion, Polytion, Stration, Sotion, Oantion, Pallantion, Ætion, Hippocration, and Amphyction, preserve the t in its true sound. Hephæstion, however, from the frequency of appearing with Alexander, has deserted the small class of his Greek companions, and joined the English multitude by rhyming with question; and Tatian and Theodotion seem perfectly Anglicized. With very few exceptions, therefore, it may be concluded that Greek and Latin proper names are pronounced alike, and that both of them follow the analogy of English pronunciation.

Ch before a vowel is always pronounced like k, as Chabrias, Chalcis, &c.; but when it comes before a mute consonant, at the beginning of a word, as in Chthonia, it is mute, and the word is pronounced as if written Thonia. Words beginning with Sche, as Schedius, Scheria, &c., are pronounced as if written Skedius, Skeria, &c.; and c before n in the Latin prænomen Cneus or Cnæus is mute: so in Cnopus, Cnossus, &c., and before t in Cteatus, and g before n in Gnidus, pronounced Nopus, Nossus, Teatus, and Nidus.

At the beginning of Greek words we frequently find the uncombinable consonants MN, TM, &c., as Mnemosyne, Mnesidamus, Mneus, Mnesteus, Tmolus, &c. These are to be pronounced with the first consonant mute, as if written Nemosyne, Nesidamus, Neus, Nesteus, Molus, &c., in the same manner as we pronounce the words bdellium, pneumatic, gnomon, mnemonics, &c., without the initial consonant. The same rule holds C hard, like K, when it comes before T, as Ctesiphon, Ctesippus, &c. Some of these words we see sometimes written with an e or i after the first consonant, as Menesteus, Timolus, &c., and then the initial consonant is pronounced.

Ph, followed by a consonant, is mute, as Phthia, Phthiotis, pronounced Thia, Thiotis, in the same manner as the naturalized Greek word phthisic is pronounced tisic.

In Ps, P is mute, as in Psyche, Psammetichus, &c., pronounced Sykee, Sammetichus, &c.

Pt. P is mute in words beginning with these letters when followed by a vowel, as Ptolemy, Pterilas, &c., pronounced Tolemy, Terilas, &c., but when followed by l, the t is heard, as in Tleptolemus, for, though we have no words of our own with these initial consonants, we have many words that end with them, and they are certainly pronounced. The same may be observed of the Z in Zmilaces.

The letters S, X, and Z require but little observation, being generally pronounced as in pure English words. It may, however, be remarked that s, at the end of words preceded by any of the vowels but e, has its pure, hissing sound, as mas, dis, os, mus, &c.; but when e precedes, it goes into the sound of z, as pes, Thersites, vates, &c. It may also be observed that, when it ends a word preceded by r or n, it has the sound of z. Thus the letter s in mens, Mars, mors, &c., has the sound as in the English words hens, stars, wars, &c. X, when beginning a word or syllable, is pronounced like z, as Xerxes, Xenophon, &c., which are pronounced Zerkzes, Zenophon, &c. Z is uniformly pronounced as in English words; thus the Z in Zeno and zeugma is pronounced as we hear it in zeal, zone, &c.

QUANTITIES OF THE VOWELS IN ENGLISH.

A first vowel in words of two syllables, with but one consonant in the middle, whatever be the quantity of it in the first syllable in Greek or Latin, is always made long in English. Thus Crates, the philosopher, and crates, a hurdle; decus, honour, and dedo, to give; ovo, to triumph, and ovum, an egg; Numa, the legislator, and numen, the divinity, have the first vowel always sounded long by an English speaker, although in Latin it is short.

On the contrary, words of three syllables, with the accent on the first, and with but one consonant after the first syllable, have the vowel of that syllable pronounced short, let the Greek or Latin quantity be what it may. Thus the first vowel of regulus and remora, mimicus and minium, is pronounced short in English, though it is long in Latin; and the u in fumigo and fugito is pronounced long in both words, though in Latin the u in the latter is short. This rule is never broken but when the first syllable is followed by e or i preceding another vowel; in this case the vowel in the first syllable is long, except the vowel be i; thus lamia, genius, Libya, doceo, cupio have the accent on the first syllable, and this syllable is pronounced long in every word but Libya, though in the original it is equally short in all.

In order to reduce these rules into a small compass, that they may be more easily comprehended and remembered, it may be observed, that as we always shorten every ante-penultimate vowel but u with the primary accent, unless followed by a semi-consonant diphthong, though this ante-penultimate vowel is often long in Greek and Latin, as Æschylus, Æschines, &c.; and the ante-penultimate i, even though it be followed by such a diphthong, as Eleusinia, Ocrisia, &c. ; so we shorten the first syllable of Æsculapius, Ænobarbus, &c., because the first syllable of both these words has the secondary accent, but we pronounce the same vowels long in Æthiopia, Ægialeus, &c., because this accent is followed by a semi-consonant diphthong.

The general rule of quantity indicated by the syllabication, is that, when a consonant ends the syllable, the vowel is always short, whether the accent be on it or not ; and that, when a vowel ends a syllable with the accent on it, it is always long ; that the vowel u, when it ends a syllable, is long, whether the accent be on it or not, and that the vowel i, when it ends a syllable without the accent, is pronounced like e ; but if the syllable be final, it has its long, open sound, as if the accent were on it.

THE ACCENT.

Words of two syllables, either Greek or Latin, whatever be the quantity in the original, have, in English, the accent on the first syllable ; and if a single consonant come between two vowels, the consonant goes to the last syllable, as Cato, Ceres, Comus, &c.

Polysyllables, when adopted without change from the Greek or Latin into English, have generally the accent of the Latin ; that is, if the penultimate be long, the accent is on it, as Severus, Democedes, &c. ; if short, the accent is on the ante-penultimate, as Demosthenes, Aristophanes, Posthumus, &c.

When Greek or Latin Proper Names are Anglicized, either by an alteration of the letters or by cutting off the final syllables, the accent of the original, as in appellatives under the same predicament, is transferred nearer to the beginning of the word. Thus, Proserpina has the accent on the second syllable ; but when altered to Proserpine, it transfers the accent to the first. The same rule applies to Homerus, Virgilius, Horatius, &c., when Anglicized to Homer, Virgil, Horace, &c. But Acrion, Arion, Amphion, Echion, Orion, Ixion, Pandion, Asion, Alphion, Ærion, Ophion, Methion, Axion, Eion, Thlexion, and Sandion preserve their penultimate accent invariably ; while Ethalion, a word of the same form and origin, is pronounced with the accent on the ante-penultimate, like Deucalion and Pygmalion.

The difficulty apparent here in deciding between common usage and classical propriety appears in words ending in ia, as Alexandria, Antiochia, Seleucia, Samaria, Iphigenia, and several others, which were pronounced by our ancestors, as is plain from their poetry, according to our own analogy, with the accent on the ante-penultimate syllable ; and there is no doubt but every word of this form would have fallen into the same accentuation, if classical criticism had not stepped in and prevented it. Some, however, seem always to have preserved the accent of their original language, as Thalia and Sophia, although Iphigenia, Antiochia, Seleucia, and Samaria have generally yielded to the English ante-penultimate accent ; and Erythia, Deidamia, Laodamia, Hippodamia, Apamia, Ilithyia, and Orithyia, from their seldom appearing in mere English composition, have not often been drawn aside into plain English pronunciation. The same may be observed of words ending in nicus or nice. If they are compounded of the Greek νικη, the penultimate syllable is always long, and must have the accent, as Stratonice, Berenice, &c. ; if this termination be what is called a gentile, i.e., naming a man from his country, the penultimate is short, and the accent is on the ante-penultimate, as Macedonicus, Sardonicus, Britannicus, &c.

Thus we see that many of these proper names are of dubious accentuation ; and the authorities which may be produced on both sides sufficiently show us the futility of criticising beyond a certain point. It is with these as with many English words : there are some which, if mispronounced, immediately show a want of education ; and there are others which, though not pronounced in the most erudite manner, stamp no imputation of ignorance or illiteracy. To have a general knowledge, therefore, of the pronunciation of these words, seems absolutely necessary for those who would appear respectable in the more respectable part of society. Perhaps no people on earth are so correct in their accentuation of proper names as the learned among the English. The Port Royal Grammar informs us that, "notwithstanding all the rules that can be given, we are often under the necessity of submitting to custom, and of accommodating our pronunciation to what is received among the learned, according to the country we are in."

HEBREW AND SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES

It is generally admitted that the true pronunciation of Hebrew is now lost; a few general rules, however, may be given as a guide to the pronunciation of the Hebrew proper names occurring in the Old and New Testament.

In Hebrew names the double letter ch, which in the English language admits of three different pronunciations (k, tch, and sh), is sounded hard like k—as Chebar, Enoch; but the words Rachel and Cherubim are Anglicised in their pronunciation, as in the English word charity.

The consonants c, s, and t, before ia and iu, take the sound of sj or sh, in a number of Scripture names, when preceded by an accent—as Asia, Cappadocia, Galatia, &c. The sound of the letter g, which in Greek and Latin is soft before e, i, and y—as Gellius, Gippius, Gyas, &c., in Hebrew names is hard—as Gerizim, Gideon; except Bethphage, which, by passing through the Greek of the New Testament, has conformed itself to the Greek pronunciation.

As to the vowels and diphthongs, the final i, when it forms a distinct syllable, is pronounced with a long sound, but the two vowels ai are pronounced sometimes as a diphthong, and sometimes as two distinct vowels. The two vowels ia, when preceded by a vowel, are sometimes pronounced as one syllable, the i sounding like y, but when sounded as two syllables, the accent is on the i. When ei is followed by a vowel, the i is usually sounded like the consonant y.

The following is an alphabetical list of Scripture Proper Names of more than two syllables, the accentuation and syllabication of each being duly noted. Words of only two syllables are omitted, because, as they are always accented on the first, no mistake can arise in their pronunciation.

ETYMOLOGY OF PLACE-NAMES

THE etymology of the name of a place has generally some bearing on its history and physiography. When different races occupy a country in succession they leave behind them the names they have given to the localities in which they have lived; and these place-names not only record the people who gave them, but the physical features of the country when they were given. In many cases these features have remained unchanged; in others the name affords an indication of the changes that have taken place within the memory of man. Round our coasts, for instance, are many Abers, and where they are a river enters, or at one time entered, the sea; where there is an Aird or an Ard we know there is a height; and in most instances Wick marks a creek and every Craig a rock or cliff.

In some countries there is quite a series of place-names, but in Britain the series is short and simple. The Celts came first, and they dealt with the prominent details of the scenery, for there was little else that required naming in those early days when people were so few; and in their naming they showed a much fuller and more poetical appreciation of landscape than their successors who had so many other objects that had to be distinguished as time went on.

GROUP TERMS

SPORTSMEN of all ages have had a technical language of their own, and a knowledge of the collective term for the animals of the chase assembled in companies is not only desirable for those engaged in their pursuit but for those who meet with the word in the course of their ordinary reading. As with sports, so it is with many everyday things—there is a correct term for their assemblages, and the use of any other word is an indication of ignorance that it is as well to avoid.

ESPERANTO

ESPERANTO, the simple language framed by Dr. Zamenhof, of Warsaw, and first published in 1887, is the second language for people of all countries, by which they may easily communicate with one another. It is a neutral language, belonging to all nations alike, and therefore accepted by all without national prejudice. It is spreading far and wide. Its ability to meet all requirements has been proved, since 1905, by a series of International Congresses at which Esperanto has been the only language used.

The time required to learn Esperanto is a mere fraction of that necessary for any national language. It can be learnt in a few weeks or months (according to the time devoted to study) by anyone of ordinary intelligence. It is spoken and written in the same straightforward, natural way by people of all nationalities.

It is not a theoretical project, but a living language, and is becoming one of the practical necessities of modern life.

WORD-FORMATION

The Grammar is based upon Sixteen Fundamental Rules.

The Parts of Speech are formed from Root-Words by the addition of appropriate letters, thus :—

O is the ending of the Noun. Adjectives end in A. Adverbs end in E.

Nouns and Adjectives form the Plural by adding J.

The Simple Verb has only Six Inflections :—

INFINITIVE.	PRESENT.	PAST.	FUTURE.	CONDITIONAL.	IMPERATIVE.
I	AS	IS	OS	US	U

N marks the Accusative (direct object).

Participles (used as Adjectives, Nouns, and Adverbs) :—

ACTIVE—Present -ant-	Past -int-	Future -ont-
PASSIVE—Present -at-	Past -it-	Future -ot-

No Irregularities and No Exceptions.

THE GRAMMAR.

AN EXPOSITION OF THE SIXTEEN RULES.

I. THE ARTICLE.

A or An (the indefinite article) is not expressed. Birdo, a bird.

The (definite article) in Esperanto is La, which never changes. La kato, the cat. La katoj, the cats.

II. THE NOUN.

All nouns (names of things, places, or persons) end in o. Rozo, a rose; Piano, a piano; Londono, London; Johano, John. To form the plural add j (pronounced as y). Patroj kaj filoj, fathers and sons.

There are only two cases: Nominative and Accusative (Objective)—the latter is formed from the nominative by adding n. Johano ludas la pianon, John plays the piano. La patro sendas leterojn, The father sends letters.

In Esperanto one may say mi amas vin, mi vin amas, amas mi vin, amas vin mi, vin mi amas, or even vin amas mi, and the sense is in each case not you love me, but I love you, for the accusative shows clearly that vin is the object loved by the subject mi.

The days of the week are :—

Sunday, dimanĉo.	Tuesday, mardo.	Thursday, jaŭdo.
Monday, lundo.	Wednesday, merkredo.	Friday, vendredo.
	Saturday, sabato.

The months of the year are :—

January, Januaro.	July, Julio.
February, Februaro.	August, Aŭgusto.
March, Marto.	September, Septembro.
April, Aprilo.	October, Oktobro.
May, Majo.	November, Novembro.
June, Junio.	December, Decembro.

Christmas Day, Kristnaska Tago; Easter, Pasko; Whitsun, Pentekosto.

III. THE ADJECTIVE.

Adjectives (words which qualify or describe nouns) end in a. They agree with their noun in number and case. *La bona *patrino trinkas varman teon, The good mother drinks warm tea. *La diligentaj *fratinoj skribas longajn leterojn, The diligent sisters write long letters.

The Comparative is formed by using Pli (ol) = more (than). La hundo estas pli inteligenta, ol la kato = The dog is more intelligent than the cat.

The Superlative is formed by using Plej (el) = most (of). La elefanto estas la plej granda el la bestoj, The elephant is the greatest of (the) beasts. Donu al mi la plej dolĉan oranĝon, Give (to) me the sweetest orange.

IV. THE NUMERALS.

The cardinal numbers are : 1 unu, 2 du, 3 tri, 4 kvar, 5 kvin, 6 ses, 7 sep, 8 ok, 9 naŭ, 10 dek, 11 dek unu, 12 dek du, 13 dek tri, 18 dek ok, 20 dudek, 25 dudek kvin, 50 kvindek, 100 cent, 138 cent tridek ok, 1,000 mil, 1,924 mil naŭcent dudek kvar.

Nouns are formed from them by adding -o : unuo, a unit; milo, a thousand; dek-duo, a dozen.

The Ordinal Numbers (adjectives) are formed by adding a (the adjective ending) to the foregoing numbers : unua, first; dua, second; tria, third; kvardek-kvara, forty-fourth; etc.

The Ordinal Adverbs are formed by adding e (the adverb termination) to the cardinal numbers. Unue, firstly; due, secondly; trie, thirdly; sepdek-oke, seventy-eighthly; etc.

For Multiples (in English -fold, as in hundredfold), add -obla or -oble.

duobla, double. triobla, treble, threefold.
duoble, doubly. trioble, trebly.
*duobla faden*o, a double (twofold) thread.

For Fractions add -ono, -ona, or -one : duono, a half ; duona, half (adjective) ; duone, by halves.

For Distributives use the prefix po, at the rate of : po kvar pencoj por ĉiu, at fourpence (for) each.

For Collectives add -op : duope, by twos ; unuope, one at a time, singly ; dekope, by tens, in tens.

V. THE PRONOUN.

The Personal Pronouns are :—

mi, I	ni, we.
vi, you.	vi, you.
li, he.	ili, they.
ŝi, she.	oni, one.
ĝi, it.	si, himself, herself, etc. (reflexive).

The Possessive Pronouns, being adjectives, are formed by adding a :—

mia, my, mine.	nia, our, ours.
via, your, yours.	via, your, yours.
lia, his.	ilia, their, theirs.
ŝia, her, hers.	onia, one's.
ĝia, its.	sia, his or her own, etc. (reflexive).

The above being adjectival take the endings j and n when necessary.

*Li amas siaj *amikoj n = He loves his (own) friends.
*Ĥi sendis mian *serviston = I sent my servant.
*Liaj *amikoj *estas miaj = His friends are mine.
*Oni aplaŭdis vian *kanton = Your song was applauded ; One applauded your song.

VI. THE VERB.

The Verb (word denoting action or state) does not change for person or number.

To indicate the Present time (or tense) add the ending -as.
,, ,, ,, Past ,, ,, ,, ,, ,, -is.
,, ,, ,, Future ,, ,, ,, ,, ,, -os.

mi iras, I go.	mi iris, I went.	mi iros, I shall go.
li iras, he goes.	li iris, he went.	li iros, he will go.
ili iras, they go.	ili iris, they went.	ili iros, they will go.

The Conditional Mood takes the ending -us.
The Imperative (command) Mood the ending -u.
The Infinitive (indefinite) Mood the ending -i.

Se vi lernus, mi ankaŭ lernus, If you were to learn, I would also learn.
Lernu Esperanton, Learn Esperanto.
Lerni, to learn. Iri, to go.

The Active Participles (with an adjectival, substantival, or adverbial sense) :—
Present end in -anta, -anto, -ante.
Past ,, ,, -inta, -into, -inte.
Future ,, ,, -onta, -onto, -onte.

La frato estas studanta, The brother is studying. Studanta knabo, A studying boy. Studanto, a student.

Studante, oni lernas, By studying one learns.

La viro estas parolinta, The man has spoken.

Parolinto, the speaker (after he has spoken). Parolinte, li sidis, Having spoken, he sat down.

La koncerto estas okazonta, The concert is about to occur.

La kantonto, The singer (the person about to sing).

The Passive Participles (with an adjectival, substantival, or adverbial sense) :—

Present end in -ata, -ato, -ate.
Past ,, ,, -ita, -ito, -ite.
Future ,, ,, -ota, -oto, -ote.

La poemo estas lernata, The poem is being learnt. La batato, The person being beaten. Batate, li ekriis, Being beaten, he cried out. La skribita letero, The written letter. Vidite, li forkuris, Having been seen, he ran away.

All the forms of the Passive Voice are made by the aid of the verb Esti, to be (which is the only auxiliary verb in Esperanto), and a passive participle of the required verb.

La pordo estas fermata, fermita, fermota, The door is being shut, has been shut, is about to be shut.

After a passive participle the preposition de = by.

Mi estas amata de mia patro, I am (being) loved by my father.

Ili estos sendataj de sia fratino, They will be sent by their sister.

The Esperanto verb is entirely regular. There are no irregular verbs to learn in Esperanto.

VII. THE ADVERB.

Most Adverbs (words which modify verbs or adjectives) are formed by adding e to a root.

Ne kantu laŭte, Do not sing loudly.

The Degrees of Comparison are the same as with adjectives, i.e., pli and plej.

Li kantas pli laŭte ol ŝi, He sings more loudly than she.

Ili kantas la plej bone, They sing the best.

VIII. THE PREPOSITION.

(a) All Prepositions require the Nominative Case after them.

Mi donis ĝin al li (not lin), I gave it to him.

Li faris ĝin por mi (not min), He did it for me.

The chief prepositions with their meanings are :—

al, to.	ĝis, until.	pro, on behalf of.
ĉe, at.	kun, with.	pri, concerning.
de, of, from.	por, for.	tra, through.
el, out of.	per, by means of.	trans, across.

(b) Each preposition has a definite and constant meaning. If the meaning of the preposition (in English) is not clear, the preposition je, which has no definite meaning in itself, may be used, or the -n without the preposition may be used if preferred, provided that the meaning is not confused.

Ili ridis je li, or *Ili ridis lin, They laughed at him, they derided him.

Oni obeis al li, or *Oni obeis lin, One obeyed him.

IX. PRONUNCIATION.

Every word is read as it is written. There are no silent letters.

X. ACCENT.

The accent or stress falls always on the last syllable but one : Patro, Patrino, eksterordinara, internacia, opinio.

XI. COMPOUND WORDS.

Compound Words are formed by joining the various root-words together, the qualifying root-word or words coming first and the chief root-word coming last :—

Vaporŝipo, steamship ; legolibro, reading-book ; fervojo, railway.

Word-building with affixes is very frequent in Esperanto, and does away with the necessity of learning a vast number of words. Lerni, to learn ; lernanto, one who is learning ; lernado, learning (continued for some time) ; lernejo, a school (place for learning) ; lernantaro, a collection of learners ; lernema, studious (with a disposition to learn) ; lerninda, worth learning ; lernejestro, head-master, etc.

XII. ORDER OF WORDS.

The order in which words are put in Esperanto is generally the same as in English, with the two following important deviations :—

(a) In Interrogative Clauses (asking questions), instead of inverting the order of the words inverted, as in English, the word ĉu is used at the beginning of the sentence. It may be considered as a warning word to indicate that a question is coming. Ĉu is not used when any other interrogative word (kiu, kia, etc.) is used.

Mi parolas, I speak, I do speak. Ĉu mi parolas ?, Do I speak ?, Am I speaking ? Mi parolis, I spoke, I did speak. Ĉu mi parolis, Did I speak ? Kiu venas, Who comes ?

(b) In Negative Clauses (denials) the word ne (not) is placed before the word it modifies. Mi ne sendis lin, I did not send him. Ne mi sendis lin, It was not I who sent him. Mi sendis ne lin, sed ŝin, I sent not him but her.

XIII. THE ACCUSATIVE OF DIRECTION AND MEASURE.

The -n of the accusative case is also used :—

(a) To show direction towards.

After al or ĝis the -n is unnecessary, for these words indicate direction themselves.

Li iras Londonon, or Li iras al Londono, He goes to London. La birdo flugas en la kampon, The bird flies into the field. La birdo flugas en la kampo, The bird flies (about) in the field.

(b) To show duration of time. Li parolis du horojn, He spoke for two hours.

(c) To show weight, measure, or distance. Li iris du mejlojn, He went two miles. La pano pezas tri funtojn, The bread weighs three pounds.

XIV. PREPOSITION (see Rule VIII. b).

XV. THE FOREIGN WORDS.

A large number of words, mostly of Latin or Greek origin, exist, which are common to most languages. These words, after being made to conform to the rules of phonetic spelling, may be used in Esperanto. They take the usual terminations. Telefono, Telegrafo, Centro, Aeroplano, Markonigramo, Opero, Teatro, Parko, Naturo, Karaktero, etc.

All international scientific and technical terms are similarly adopted.

XVI. ELISION IN POETRY.

For euphony in poetry the final o of the noun (in the nominative case only) may be dropped.

La mond' eterne militanta, The world eternally fighting. The a in la may be dropped when it follows a preposition ending in a vowel : e.g., de l' = de la.

De l' soldatoj, of the soldiers. De l' maristoj, of the sailors.

THE METRIC SYSTEM

WITH TABLES OF THE EQUIVALENTS IN BRITISH WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

THE Metric System, established in France in the year 1801, is so called because it has for its basis the metre, from which the units of all its measures are derived. The metre is the ten-millionth part of the assumed length of a meridian arc from the equator to either pole. The units of the various measures are as follows: The Metre, for measures of Length; the Are, for Surfaces; the Stere, for Solids; the Litre, for Capacity; the Gramme, for Weight; the Franc, for Money. The unit in each degree is one-tenth of the degree above it and ten times the degree below it, and in order to express the decimal proportion, the following prefixes to the principal units have been adopted :—

Deka	signifies	10 times the Unit
Hecto	,,	100 ,,
Kilo	,,	1,000 ,,
Myria	,,	10,000 ,,
Deci	expresses the	10th part of the Unit.
Centi	,,	100th ,,
Milli	,,	1,000th ,,
